Thomas Cowan in East St. Louis Narrowly Misses Being Caught in Fire in Midair.

Because his baileon caught fire a moment before he was ready to ascend yesterday afternoon, Thomas Cowan, the aeronaut, was saved from a fire in midair. He probably would have been compelled to jump from his car.

Cowan had made everything ready for an ascent from in front of the Opera-house, to be followed by a jump with the parachute, and was just about to give the word to let go when flames burst from the balloon. In extinguishing them he was slightly burned about the face and hands.

Transit Company Informed That Regular Assignments Would Reduce Accidents.

TO CHANGING CARS.

PECULIARITIES OF COACHES.

Employes Say They Should Be Allowed to Take Out the Same Car Daily and Study It.

As a result of public agitation on the affairs of the St. Louis Transit Company. caused by the numerous accidents that have resulted in more than sixty deaths since January 1, employes of the company are suggesting to some of the officials that some accidents would be avoided if the motormen took the same cars out every day.

The Transit Company, unlike the steam ratiroad companies, which assign an engineer to the same locomotive every run, assigns its motormen to any one of the bundreds of cars. The policy followed at the larger sheds

The policy followed at the larger sheds of the Transit Cimpany, if not at all, is to assign a motorman to the car that happens to be the first on the tracks. As a result, motormen on some of the large divisions often do not have the same car more than once a week.

Sometimes a longer period elapses before a motorman will have a car which he has run before. As a motorman on Olive street passed a car yesterday he remarked: "I haven't had that car for three weeks.

DIFFERENCE IN CARS. The advantages of assigning the same motorman to the same car every day are obvious, say the Transit Company employes. Every street car, like every locomotive, has its peculiarities and individuality. Two cars apparently alike in every respect will be found upon trial o be different in some particular. The brakes will not work with the same de gree of ease and swiftness. The fingers of the controller are more worn on one car than on the other, and consequently the current will be weaker on the one. In some cases the platform of one car will not be as solid as on the other, and therefore, the motorman must brace himself differently on the two cars, especially when throwing the brake. So marked is the difference between cars sometimes that one motorman said: "I would rather run some cars two days than other cars one day." These individual traits of cars, it is argued, furnish good reasons why a motorman should have the same car every day. If a motorman had the same car constantly, it is said, he would learn its pecultarities, be thoroughly cognizant of the amount of power required to set the brakes, and fully informed as to the time necessary to stop the car. Another fact, it is said, which makes i incumbent upon the Transit Company to assign a man to the same car every day is that sometimes a motorman will be assigned to a car equipped with air brakes, and then will not see that car again for weeks. A special kind of knowledge is ngcessary to the successful manipulation of an air brake. PERSONAL INTEREST SHOWN. But the argument in favor of having the same cars every day that appeals to the men most strongly is that which has had weight with the steam railroad companies in giving to each engineer his own loco motive. This is, that a motorman having the same car every day will take s personal interest in keeping it in order. and is more likely to report slight defects that happen to come under his no-tice than he would be otherwise. True, the cars are inspected at the barns, but it is argued that no harm could come from so assigning the motormen as to make them in effect an additional corps of inspectors. The policy of assigning motormen to the same cars every day is not an untried experiment in St. Louis. Before the various car lines were consolidated, and for awhile after the consolidation, each motorman took the same car out every morning. The officials of the Transit Company argue, however, that to give a motorman the same car every day would necessitate the employment of more men at the barns to switch the cars and possibly the purchase of more cars. More cars are at each barn now than before the consolidation. Under the policy followed at the larger barns, the first car in at night is the first car out in the morning. A car comes in at one end of the shed and goes out at the other end. At the Olive street barns the cars of the following lines are sidetracked and housed: Page, Olive, Delmar, Spalding, Taylor, Creve Coeur and Clayton. In all, about 600 cars are at this barn and about 400 are used on regular runs. The cars of each line are kept on separate tracks. The car assignment for the day runs is made at night after all the cars are in, and the motormen do not know until they report for duty the next morning what ears they will take out on that day. SCHOOLS.
